SOME BECOME CLUB OWNERS

Comiskey, Mack and Tebeau Have Made Fortunes Out of Baseball

The day when the baseball player is reaping the fruits of his labor is at hand. In the old days, the players knew but little baseball, being in the game merely because they had the capital. The ball players were poorly paid and when they were unable to play they entered other vocations. It is different now. Not only does the average player receive far more remuneration than in the "good old days," but they are gradually creeping into the financial department of the game and sharing the proceeds of the game which they helped to build up.

Comiskey, once a first baseman and not a richly-salaried one, at that is now a millionaire owner of Chicago. Connie Mack who considered $2000 might good pay when he was catching for Pittsburgh, is part owner of the Philadelphia Athletics. John M. Ward, a star pitcher, and infielder, who possibly drew down $2400 a year as a player, is now president of the Boston Nationals. James McAleer, after a lifetime spent on the diamond as player and manager, is president of the Boston Americans, while Clark Griffith, who served in the ranks, is one of the stockholders of the Washington club.

Hughie Jennings, a brilliant infielder and manager, is now one of the owners of the Providence club of the International league. George Tebeau, one of the old Cleveland players, has grown wealthy from his holdings in the American association and Western league. Others who have become magnates in the minor leagues are: Walter McCredie of Portland, Bill Coughlin, Bill Clymer, Jack Dunn, McGinnity, George Stallings and Charley Frank.

IMPALED ON PICKET FENCE

Steeplejack Falls Sixty Feet From Church Tower in North Adams

John Cunningham, a steeplejack, 29 years of age and single, fell from the roof of St. Anthony of Padua's church at North Adams Thursday afternoon and was impaled on a picket fence. A fracture of the skull at the base of the brain was the chief injury. He died early Friday morning. Dr. McGrath lifted him from the fence and hurried him to the hospital. Cunningham had been engaged by Father Latanz to gild the cross on the church roof. He had ropes to secure him safely to the steeple but these were not about his body when he fell. He toppled backwards. It is believed that he was overcome with a fit of weakness.

He dropped in sight of several women who were on their way to attend an afternoon party, and they were so overcome by the sight that one or two of them had to have care. Several years ago a similar accident happened at Notre Dame church in North Adams, when four men fell from the roof, three being killed.

RUCKER BEST OF LEFT-HANDERS

Goes Against Strongest Teams and Pitchers and Beats Them

"Ty" Cobb, that most effective Detroler comes from Georgia. So does "Nap" Rucker, the Brooklyn club's famous south-paw. Georgia is not long on quantity, so far as sending top liners into the big leagues is concerned, but the quality is certainly there. There is no better batsman, run-getter or fly-chaser than Cobb; no steadier, sweeter slab performer than Rucker. Since George Edward Waddell was chased out of the big arena and Dr. Harry White and Farmer "Eddie" Plank have started to advance upon the passe stage, Rucker has moved into first place among the southpaws. Rather as "Rube" Marquard, a three year older, has had but one big season, and Vean Gregg, that clever Cleveland, is strictly a one-year man, it is but fair to place Rucker in first position among the left-handers. Brooklyn has owned a near-tail-ender ever since Rucker went to work for "Charley" Ebbets. "Nap" has had a long succession of good years. His percentage of victories each summer has always been far greater than that gained by his club, and the records will show that the majority of "Nap's" triumphs have been registered against the strong clubs of the National League.

Rucker is at his best when the batting is the toughest. He loves to face one of the good teams. He would rather be pitted against Mordecai Brown and the "Cubs," or "Christy" Mathewson and the "Giants," than be sent against Boston or Cincinnati. The star players of the National league, particularly the members of the Chicago "Cubs," consider Rucker the toughest pitcher of them all to beat. Particularly in Brooklyn is "Nap's" stuff hard to solve. There, adorning the fence in deep center field, is a big advertising sign, and when Rucker is on duty and going his fastest the colored background results in having his fast ball on top of the batter before the batter is really sure "Nap" has let go of the sphere.

Give Rucker one run in Brooklyn, and he is the best bet in baseball to be bracketed. Slip him two runs and it's all over. "Nap" is also a good road man, especially in his biggest combats, but as an at home pitcher he is considered the best of them all in the National league, and that even if he is associated with a ball team that is anything but startlingly impressive. Ruck is not a resourceful workman, but then he is so very, very good, naturally he is not called upon to pull anything on the slab very often. He knows full well that the team behind him is not of very much account, save in a few positions, and for that reason he is never able to loaf, and just like the rest of the pitchers, particularly those of the first flight, he always wants to boost his win column.

Whenever Rucker gets bumped and that is seldom, the hammering comes in a closing inning. Few twirlers use as many curve balls in the course of a game as "Nap," and when he tires, as he sometimes does in the bag end of his game on a hot afternoon in mid season, his famous hop ball loses a lot of its hop and is straightened out. Rucker, though, has probably been retired less than any other star pitcher in either major league. When he starts, it is a 50-40-1 shot he finishes. In 1905 the "Naps" trained at Atlanta. Rucker had joined the previous fall, raw from the country cross lot team of which he had been a member. He had fair success with the "Crackers," and was told to report the following spring, which was when the "Naps" first invaded Atlanta to train with "Nap" Lajoie as manager. Rucker was a youth with a magnificent physique and a most powerful arm. He was bashful, however, to the extreme, and Manager Otis Jordan could not see him at all. "Ten thousand dollar arm and a 10-cent head," was Jordan's voiced opinion of the burly youngster. So completely did Rucker fail to acquire a spot in his manager's good graces that when the "Crackers" were spilled upon the field each day for practice, Napoleon Rucker generally had to hunt up some small boy or one of the "Naps" with whom to warm up, as Jordan did not think him worth while wasting one of his players on. Finally he was given a chance to pitch against the "Naps" in an exhibition game. Rucker worked five innings. He fanned his namesake "Nap" Lajoie, twice, and allowed but one hit, and Cleveland had a great batting team that spring. A few days later, when "Low" Moren failed to fool the "Naps," Rucker was called to the rescue without much preliminary warming up. He had confidence however, but confidence was not enough, and when he managed to get the ball over, the "Naps" clouted it. Rucker was lucky to get inside the park after that and was soon released to Augusta, from whom Brooklyn bought him. Jordan is still a minor leaguer, but Rucker is one of the highest-priced hurlers in the country.
